

Schools and students will lose the most

- The Mayor wants to cut $641 million from our schools next year (amounting to $2 billion in total cuts over four years)
  - Next year, $100 million of Fair Student Funding is being cut.
  - $54 million cut from “Equity and Excellence for All” programs that have been central to the highest-ever graduation and college enrollment rates, and has decreased school pushout (cuts will total $216 million over four years)
  - Axed the Summer Youth Employment Program (SYEP), and with it, 75,000 jobs that students were counting on having this summer.
- A four-year hiring freeze that would leave positions vacant when teachers and social workers retire.

The NYPD is protected and empowered

- That is compared to only $23 million cut from the NYPD. Cuts to education will be 2800% greater than cuts to policing.
  - Despite overall cuts, the NYPD is set to receive a $5 million increase from the preliminary figures released in January.
- The Mayor is dedicated to preserving and increasing one area of funding for schools next year: one piece of the subcontract from DOE to NYPD is slated to increase by $4 million (totalling $307 million).
- The city will continue to hire police officers and their headcount will slightly increase.

The Capital Plan: policing and surveillance infrastructure

Capital Plans are approved in five-year chunks and amended throughout that time. Funding for security infrastructure has not been affected by the health crisis in the plan's current draft.

- $200 million for “Safety & Security.” That's $40 million a year (for five years) on security hardware such as brand new metal detectors and surveillance cameras in schools.
  - Over $7 million in security camera installation alone is currently in progress, with one school even being projected to spend $630,000 on cameras.
  - The Capital Plan includes a note that the DOE will partner with the NYPD School Safety Division, but no budget breakdown of the purchases related to that partnership.
